Piper Alderman releases podcast: “Employment Law for the Time Poor”

Need to know about the latest issues in employment relations laws? Time poor? There’s now a podcast for that.

In addition to our quarterly national ER seminar series and online publications, you can now engage with our Employment & Labour team through the world of podcasts.

Our first episode, featuring Emily Haar and Professor Andrew Stewart, called “Why Lawyers Shouldn’t Do Maths”, looks at the new calculation of personal/carer’s leave (subject to High Court appeal) and the High Court’s decision concerning the implied right of political communication.

This first release is live and available at:
